PREFACE

Internships are an important part of the undergraduate programme, as they allow students to see how classroom learning is applied in real organisations. The Four-Year Undergraduate Programme (FYUGP), introduced in line with the National Education Policy 2020, gives special importance to experiential learning, skill development and employability. This report has been prepared as part of the internship requirement of Magadh University and the Higher Education guidelines applicable in Bihar.

The report describes the internship undertaken in Human Resource Management (HRM) at RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED, the plan followed, the work carried out, and the learning gained. Every organisation, whether a small coaching centre in Gaya or a large company, depends on its people. Someone must decide whom to hire, explain the job clearly, welcome the new employee, record attendance, pay salary correctly and on time, train people, review their performance, keep them motivated and follow the labour laws. Human Resource Management (HRM) is the set of practices that makes this possible: HR planning, recruitment and selection, job descriptions, onboarding, attendance and payroll, training, performance appraisal, employee engagement, policies and records. This internship offered a first-hand introduction to how these practices work together.

The report has been arranged in the order suggested by the University, beginning with the cover page and acknowledgement and ending with the conclusion and attendance sheet. It is hoped that the report gives a clear and honest account of the internship experience. All examples in it use dummy data and fictitious organisations; no real employee or candidate information was handled and no confidential document was used.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This report documents the internship completed in Human Resource Management (HRM) at RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED (RK NEXORA - 'Campus to Career'). The programme required a minimum of 120 hours, completed over about four to five weeks (28 working days) with daily sessions of four to five hours, and was supported by an attendance log, supervisor guidance and review.

Background. Human Resource Management means attracting, developing, rewarding and retaining the people an organisation needs, and treating them fairly. Its great strength is that it connects people with the goals of the business, and its quality can be measured through hiring time, attendance, attrition, training results and employee feedback. A good HR professional therefore combines communication and empathy with accuracy, confidentiality and knowledge of rules. The work covers understanding the HR functions, recruiting and selecting candidates, writing job descriptions, onboarding new joiners, managing attendance and payroll, planning training, appraising performance, engaging employees, following HR policies and labour laws, and keeping accurate records. For a student from any discipline, the internship shows how psychology, communication, law, numbers and ethics come together in a real HR job.

Objectives. The internship aimed to (i) build a structured understanding of HRM and its main functions, (ii) learn recruitment and selection and job description writing, (iii) learn onboarding, attendance and payroll, (iv) learn training and development, performance appraisal and employee engagement, (v) learn HR policies, labour laws, records and documentation, and (vi) develop communication, documentation and professional discipline.

Work carried out. The student first studied the fundamentals of Human Resource Management (HRM), then worked through HR functions, recruitment and selection, job description writing, the onboarding process, attendance and payroll, training and development, performance appraisal, employee engagement, HR policies and labour laws, and HR records and documentation. Each topic had a concept session followed by a hands-on task using free tools, sample templates and dummy data. The later part of the programme was devoted to a case study, a mock practical exercise, supervisor review and preparation of this report.

Project. The work was tied together in a project titled HR Operations & Recruitment Project, in which a job description, a recruitment tracker, an onboarding checklist and a payroll and attendance sheet were prepared for a fictitious organisation and an HR summary report was written.

Method. A blended method was followed - learn, practise, document and review - supported by a daily attendance log with day-wise remarks and regular feedback from the supervisor.

Learning gained. The student gained a clear understanding of how HR processes are planned, run and documented, practical familiarity with job descriptions, candidate screening, interview scoring, onboarding checklists, attendance and payroll sheets in MS Excel, training plans, appraisal forms and HR records, awareness of labour laws, consent and data protection rules, and improved communication, fairness and professional discipline.

Key observations. HR works best when roles and expectations are written clearly; hiring is better with a structured process than with a quick impression; salary must be accurate and on time because it builds trust; feedback and recognition keep people longer than pay alone; and records must be accurate and confidential.

Conclusion. The internship met its objectives and contributed to the student's academic understanding, employability and confidence. The report follows the University's suggestive format: cover page, acknowledgement, certificate, contents, preface, executive summary, about the agency, plan and execution, learning outcome, conclusion and attendance sheet.

4. Employability-oriented guidance connecting campus learning to career readiness.

4. Programme Structure

The internship programme is organised around a fixed number of learning hours, completed over a defined period. Each intern is registered on the internship portal with a unique registration number, is assigned a supervisor, follows a day-wise plan and maintains an attendance log. Learning is organised into three phases: Orientation (Days 1-2), Learning and Practice (Days 3-22, ten sub-topics of two days each: one concept day and one hands-on day) and Project and Review (Days 23-28), followed by a concluding review.

5. Role of the Supervisor

The internship supervisor assigned by the agency guided the student through the programme, explained concepts, assigned practice tasks, reviewed the daily log and gave feedback. The supervisor also verified attendance and reviewed the student's work at the end of the programme.

PLAN AND EXECUTION

1. Objectives

The internship was planned around the following objectives, each linked to a part of the programme:

1. Understand HR functions - the meaning of HRM, its main functions and roles (Week 1).
2. Learn recruitment and selection - sourcing, screening, interviews and selection (Week 1).
3. Learn job description writing - job title, duties, qualifications and skills (Week 2).
4. Learn the onboarding process - joining formalities, induction and documents (Week 2).
5. Learn attendance and payroll - attendance records, leave and salary calculation (Week 2).
6. Learn training and development, performance appraisal and employee engagement - training needs, evaluation, appraisal methods, KPIs, feedback, surveys and retention (Week 3).
7. Learn HR policies, labour laws, records and documentation, and complete the HR project (Week 4).
8. Develop professional discipline - communication, confidentiality, honesty, documentation and report writing (throughout).

2. Methodology

The programme followed a blended method made up of four connected steps, repeated for each topic:

Learn. Each topic began with a concept session in which the supervisor explained the purpose of the topic, its main terms and how it connects with the other parts of Human Resource Management (HRM). Notes were prepared in the student's own words.

Practise. The concepts were then applied in guided hands-on tasks - reading and writing a job description, screening sample CVs against it, scoring interviews on a sheet, preparing an onboarding checklist, calculating attendance and salary in MS Excel, planning a training session and evaluating it, designing an appraisal form, planning an engagement activity, summarising an HR policy and creating an employee file. Only sample CVs with fictitious names, dummy salaries and fictitious organisations were used. Only fictitious organisations, sample documents and dummy data were used, so that no real personal or confidential information was handled.

Document. Every day's work was recorded in the internship attendance log with a short remark, and sheets, drafts and reports were saved so that the work could be reviewed.

Review. The supervisor reviewed the work, pointed out errors and suggested improvements. Review days, a case study and a mock practical exercise helped to consolidate the learning.

3. Understanding Human Resource Management (HRM) - Concepts Studied

3.1 HR functions overview

Human Resource Management (HRM) is the part of management concerned with the people who work in an organisation: finding them, preparing them for work, paying and developing them, and maintaining a fair and safe workplace. Earlier it was called personnel management and mostly meant paperwork; today it is seen as a partner in achieving the goals of the business. The main functions are HR planning (deciding how many people with which skills are needed), recruitment and selection, onboarding, training and development, compensation and payroll, performance appraisal, employee engagement and relations, compliance with laws and policies, and HR records.

In a small organisation the owner or one HR person performs all of these tasks, while a large organisation has separate teams for recruitment, payroll, learning and employee relations. Common roles are HR executive, recruiter or talent acquisition executive, payroll executive, training coordinator and HR manager. HR measures its work through simple indicators such as time to hire, attendance rate, attrition rate, training hours and employee satisfaction. The internship stressed that people are not 'resources' like machines: HR must be fair, confidential and respectful, because decisions about hiring, pay and discipline affect lives.

3.2 Recruitment and selection

Recruitment is the process of attracting suitable candidates, and selection is the process of choosing the best among them. It begins with a manpower requisition: the manager explains why a post is needed, and HR confirms the budget and the job description. Sources are internal (promotion, transfer, employee referral) and external (job portals, the National Career Service portal, campus drives, social media and professional networks, consultancies and walk-in interviews). The vacancy notice should state the role, requirements, location and how to apply, without any discriminatory wording.

Selection follows steps: receiving applications; screening CVs against the job description; a short telephone or online screening; tests or a demonstration where relevant; one or more interviews; reference and document checks with the candidate's consent; the final decision; and the offer letter. Interviews are more reliable when they are structured: the same questions and a scoring sheet are used for every candidate, with behavioural questions ('tell me about a time when...') and situational questions. Common mistakes are deciding on first impression, asking questions about marriage, religion or caste, and ignoring the scoring sheet. Useful measures are time to hire, cost per hire and offer acceptance rate.

3.3 Job description writing

A job description (JD) is a written statement of what a job involves. It is prepared after job analysis, the study of the tasks, responsibilities, working conditions and skills of a post. A JD usually contains the job title, department, reporting line, location, a short summary of the purpose of the job, the main duties and responsibilities, working hours, and the key results expected. A job specification is the companion statement of the person needed: qualifications, experience, skills, knowledge and personal qualities.

Good JDs use clear, simple language and action verbs ('prepares', 'maintains', 'coordinates'), list the most important duties first, avoid vague phrases and avoid wording that excludes people unfairly, such as age or gender preferences that are not genuinely required. They are shared with candidates, used in interviews, used to set targets and appraisals, and reviewed when the job changes. A JD also helps in fixing a fair salary range by comparing the job with similar jobs, which is called job evaluation.

3.4 Onboarding process

Onboarding is the process of welcoming a new employee and helping the person become productive and comfortable. It starts before the first day with the offer letter, acceptance and a list of documents to bring, and continues through the joining day, induction and the probation period. Typical documents are identity and address proof, educational and experience certificates, passport-size photographs and bank account details; only the documents that are really needed should be collected, and they must be kept confidentially. The appointment letter states the post, salary, joining date, probation, notice period and main terms.

On the first day the new joiner completes forms, receives a workstation or tools, meets the team and learns the organisation's values, rules, timings, leave and conduct policies. A buddy or mentor and a simple 30-60-90 day plan help the person settle in, and a feedback meeting at the end of the first month shows how it is going. Poor onboarding is one of the common reasons why new employees leave early, so it is treated as an important HR process and not as a formality.

3.5 Attendance and payroll

Attendance records show who worked on which day. They are kept in a register, a biometric or card system or a mobile application, and they form the basis of salary. Leave is recorded by type: casual leave, sick leave, earned leave, maternity leave, public holidays and loss of pay (LOP) when no leave is available. Rules on leave, late coming and overtime must be written in the HR policy and applied equally to everyone.

Payroll is the process of calculating and paying salary. The usual cycle is: collect attendance and leave up to the cut-off date; calculate gross salary (basic pay plus allowances such as house rent allowance and conveyance); calculate deductions such as provident fund, employees' state insurance where applicable, professional tax where the state levies it, tax deducted at source and loan recovery; arrive at the net pay; prepare payslips; pay through bank transfer; deposit statutory dues by the due dates; and keep the records. Cost to company (CTC) is the total yearly cost of an employee to the organisation. Payroll data is highly confidential, mistakes damage trust, and rates, limits and due dates change, so they must be checked against official sources.

3.6 Training and development

Training improves the skills needed for the present job, while development prepares people for future roles. The process begins with a training needs analysis: at the level of the organisation (what must improve), the task (what skills the job needs) and the person (what the employee lacks). Then objectives are written, the content, trainer, method, schedule and budget are planned, the session is delivered and the result is evaluated.

Methods include on-the-job training, coaching and mentoring, job rotation, classroom workshops, demonstrations, e-learning and simulations. Evaluation commonly follows the four levels of Kirkpatrick: reaction (did participants like it), learning (what did they learn, measured by pre-test and post-test), behaviour (do they apply it at work) and results (what changed in the business). Training cost per person and the improvement in test scores or performance are simple measures. Training works best when the manager supports the learner and when time is given to practise.

3.7 Performance appraisal

Performance appraisal is the regular and systematic review of how well an employee has done the job. Its purposes are to give feedback, to recognise good work, to identify training needs and to support decisions on increments, promotions and, when necessary, improvement plans. The process is: set goals and key result areas at the start of the period; observe and record performance through the period; review against the goals; hold a feedback discussion; and agree actions.

Methods include ranking, graphic rating scales, behaviourally anchored rating scales, management by objectives, key performance indicators (KPIs) and 360-degree feedback from managers, peers and others. Common rating errors are the halo effect (one good quality colours everything), the horn effect, recency (only the latest events count), central tendency (everyone is rated average) and leniency or strictness. Good appraisal is based on evidence, uses clear criteria, is discussed in private and is a two-way conversation. A useful feedback pattern is to describe the situation, the behaviour observed and its impact.

3.8 Employee engagement

Employee engagement is the level of commitment and enthusiasm that people bring to their work. It is more than job satisfaction: an engaged employee cares about the organisation's goals and puts in extra effort willingly. Its drivers include meaningful work, fair pay, recognition, a supportive manager, chances to learn and grow, clear communication, a safe and respectful workplace and a healthy balance between work and personal life.

Engagement activities include recognition of good work, team lunches and events, open meetings with management, suggestion boxes, mentoring, learning opportunities and wellness support. Engagement is measured through short surveys, one-to-one conversations, attendance patterns and the attrition rate, which is the number of people who left during a period divided by the average number of employees, multiplied by 100. Exit interviews explain why people leave, and an employee net promoter score (eNPS) shows how many employees would recommend the organisation. Retention is cheaper than replacement, because every exit brings the cost of hiring and training again.

3.9 HR policies and labour laws

An HR policy manual states the rules of the workplace so that everyone is treated alike. It normally covers the code of conduct, working hours, attendance and leave, dress code, use of computers and social media, anti-harassment, grievance handling, disciplinary procedure, confidentiality and data protection, travel and expense rules, and exit and notice. Policies must be written in simple language, approved by management, shared with all employees and updated when laws change.

Labour laws protect both employees and employers. India's 29 central labour laws were consolidated into four Labour Codes - the Code on Wages, 2019, the Industrial Relations Code, 2020, the Code on Social Security, 2020 and the Occupational Safety, Health and Working Conditions Code, 2020 - which were brought into force from 21 November 2025, while the central and state rules under them have been notified in stages. The Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace (Prevention, Prohibition and Redressal) Act, 2013 requires an Internal Committee in workplaces with ten or more employees, and the state Shops and Establishments laws, the Income-tax Act and the Digital Personal Data Protection Act, 2023 also affect HR work. Because this area is changing, students were advised always to confirm current rules, rates and procedures on the official websites of the Ministry of Labour and Employment and the state labour department.

3.10 HR records and documentation

Accurate records are the memory of HR. A personal file is kept for every employee, containing the application and CV, the offer and appointment letters, identity and qualification copies, bank details, attendance and leave records, salary revisions, training records, appraisals, warnings and commendations, and exit papers. Standard letters include the offer letter, appointment letter, confirmation letter, increment letter, warning letter, experience certificate and relieving letter.

Records may be kept in a register, in an Excel or Google Sheet or in an HR information system (HRIS) or HR software. Good practice is to use a fixed format and file-naming pattern, restrict access to people who need it, keep backups, retain records for the period required by law and policy, update them promptly and destroy them safely afterwards. Employee data is personal data, so it must be collected only for a stated purpose, kept secure and never shared without a valid reason. The exit process also needs documentation: resignation letter, notice period, handover, return of assets, exit interview and full and final settlement.

3.11 Rules, ethics and limitations

HR work must follow laws and ethical principles. Every employee and candidate must be treated fairly, without discrimination on grounds such as religion, caste, gender, place of birth or disability, in line with the equality principles of the Constitution of India. Personal data of candidates and employees may be collected and used only with consent and for a stated purpose under the Digital Personal Data Protection Act, 2023. The Labour Codes, the Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace Act, 2013 and the Child Labour (Prohibition and Regulation) Act, 1986 set minimum standards that every employer must follow.

Good practice includes honest job advertisements, confidentiality of salary and personal information, avoiding conflict of interest in hiring friends or relatives without disclosure, written and consistent decisions, giving a fair hearing before disciplinary action, paying wages on time, and recording approvals. The laws, rates and procedures mentioned in this report change often, so they must be verified against official sources, and the figures in the examples are dummy values for learning only.

6.10 HR Records & Documentation

Concept: Employee files, letters and the HR database. Practice carried out: Creating an employee file format, drafting standard HR letters and building an HR database sheet with a monthly HR report.

7. Rules, Ethics and Good Practice - Points Studied

HRM operates within a legal and ethical framework. Candidate and employee data, such as address, bank details, identity documents and health information, may be collected and used only with consent and for a stated purpose under the Digital Personal Data Protection Act, 2023. Hiring, pay and promotion decisions must be fair and free from discrimination. The Labour Codes, the Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace Act, 2013 and the state Shops and Establishments laws set rules on wages, working hours, leave, safety and a respectful workplace.

Good practice includes keeping salary and personnel files confidential, giving equal treatment, writing clear offer and appointment letters, paying salary on time, following the written policy in the same way for everyone, giving employees a way to raise grievances, protecting records with passwords and limited access, and never using personal information for any other purpose.

8. Process Flows Studied

Process mapping was used to understand how work in Human Resource Management (HRM) moves from start to finish and who is responsible at each step. The main flows studied were:

- Recruitment: Manpower requisition > Job description > Sourcing > CV screening > Interviews and tests > Reference check > Offer > Joining.
- Onboarding: Offer accepted > Document collection > Appointment letter > Joining formalities > Induction > Buddy and 30-60-90 plan > Probation review > Confirmation.
- Payroll: Attendance and leave cut-off > Gross salary > Deductions > Net pay > Payslip > Bank transfer > Statutory deposits > Records.
- Training: Needs analysis > Objectives > Plan and budget > Delivery > Evaluation > Follow-up.

- Appraisal: Goal setting > Monitoring > Review against KPIs > Feedback meeting > Rating and decision > Development plan.
- Exit: Resignation > Notice period > Handover > Exit interview > Return of assets > Full and final settlement > Relieving letter.

9. Worked Examples with Sample (Dummy) Data

The examples below use a fictitious local business, Gyan Jyoti Classes, a coaching centre for Class 9 and 10 in a town in Bihar, with 25 employees. All names, numbers and results are dummy figures for learning.

Example A: Job description

The centre needed a Class 10 Maths teacher. The job description was written as follows. Job title: Mathematics Teacher (Class 10). Reports to: Academic Coordinator. Purpose: to teach Class 10 mathematics and help students achieve good board results. Main duties: conduct six classes a day, Monday to Saturday; prepare lesson plans and weekly tests; check answer sheets and give feedback within three days; run a doubt-clearing hour; report student progress to parents every month. Qualifications and skills: M.Sc. or B.Sc. in Mathematics with B.Ed. preferred, two years of teaching experience, clear communication in Hindi and English. Salary range (dummy): Rs. 18,000 to Rs. 24,000 a month, depending on experience. The wording was checked to remove any preference of gender or age that was not required for the job.

Example B: Recruitment funnel

For this post 120 applications were received. After screening against the job description 45 were shortlisted, 18 attended the first interview or demonstration class, 6 reached the final round and 3 were given offers, of whom 2 accepted. Screening rate = 45 / 120 = 37.5%. Interview-to-offer rate = 3 / 18 = about 16.7%. Offer acceptance rate = 2 / 3 = about 66.7%. The post was filled in 21 days. The recruitment spend was Rs. 12,000 (a job portal advertisement of Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 4,000 for other costs), so the cost per hire = 12,000 / 2 = Rs. 6,000.

Example C: Interview scoring sheet

Every candidate was scored out of 10 on four criteria with these weights: subject knowledge 40%, communication 25%, demonstration class 25% and attitude 10%. Candidate P scored 8, 7, 9 and 8, so the weighted score = (0.40 × 8) + (0.25 × 7) + (0.25 × 9) + (0.10 × 8) = 3.20 + 1.75 + 2.25 + 0.80 = 8.00 out of 10. Candidate Q scored 9, 6, 7 and 7, giving 3.60 + 1.50 + 1.75 + 0.70 = 7.55. Candidate P was selected because of the higher score, and the sheets were saved as the record of the decision.

Example D: Attendance and salary calculation

A teacher has a monthly gross salary of Rs. 24,000 made up of basic pay Rs. 12,000, house rent allowance Rs. 4,800, conveyance Rs. 1,200 and special allowance Rs. 6,000. In a month of 30 days with 26 working days she was present on 24 days and absent without leave on 2 days, so attendance = 24 / 26 = about 92.3%. The loss-of-pay deduction = (24,000 / 30) × 2 = 800 × 2 = Rs. 1,600. Provident fund at 12% of basic pay = 0.12 × 12,000 = Rs. 1,440 and other deductions are Rs. 200. Net pay = 24,000 − 1,600 − 1,440 − 200 = Rs. 20,760. This example is simplified: actual rates, ceilings and the base for each deduction must be taken from the current rules.

Example E: Training evaluation

The centre trained its 20 teachers in 'doubt-clearing methods' in a two-day workshop costing Rs. 15,000, so the cost per teacher = 15,000 / 20 = Rs. 750. The average pre-test score was 52 and the post-test score was 71, a gain of 19 points, or (71 − 52) / 52 = about 36.5%. The average feedback score was 4.2 out of 5. Three months later the coordinator checked whether the teachers used the methods in class, which is the behaviour level of evaluation.

Example F: Performance appraisal

Teachers are appraised on four KPIs with weights: syllabus completion 30%, student results 30%, attendance and punctuality 20% and student feedback 20%. A teacher scored 90%, 80%, 100% and 85% on these. The weighted score = (0.30 × 90) + (0.30 × 80) + (0.20 × 100) + (0.20 × 85) = 27 + 24 + 20 + 17 = 88. Under the rating bands used (90 and above outstanding, 75 to 89 good, 60 to 74 average, below 60 needs improvement) the rating is 'good', and the feedback meeting recorded one strength and one area to improve with a plan.

Example G: Attrition and engagement

During the year 5 of the 25 employees left and 5 new employees joined, so the average headcount stayed 25. Attrition rate = 5 / 25 × 100 = 20% and retention = 80%. An engagement survey received 18 responses from 25 employees, a response rate of 72%, with an average score of 3.9 out of 5. Of the 18 respondents 9 were promoters, 6 neutral and 3 detractors, so the employee net promoter score = (9 − 3) / 18 × 100 = about 33. The main reasons given were recognition and growth opportunities, so a monthly 'best teacher' recognition and a learning plan were introduced.

Example H: HR headcount and records

The HR database showed 25 employees: 15 in teaching (60%), 4 in administration (16%), 3 in support staff (12%) and 3 in management (12%). A check of the personal files found that 3 of 25 files (12%) lacked a signed appointment letter and 2 lacked a bank account proof, and the missing papers were collected within a week. File names followed the pattern EmployeeID_Name_Document so that records could be found quickly.

Example I: Monthly HR report

For one month the report showed: headcount 25; new joiners 2; exits 1, so monthly attrition = 1 / 25 = 4%; average attendance 94%; training hours 40; appraisals pending 3; open vacancies 1. It also noted problems (late attendance entries on two days) and recommendations: finish the attendance entry by the 25th of each month, close pending appraisals within two weeks and start the hiring for the open post. The report was prepared in MS Excel in the same format each month.

10. Project: HR Operations & Recruitment Project

Scope. The internship work was organised around a project in which a job description, a recruitment and interview process, an onboarding checklist and an attendance and payroll sheet were prepared and an HR summary report was written for a fictitious organisation, using sample documents and dummy data.

Steps followed. (i) Studied the HR functions and chose a fictitious organisation; (ii) wrote a job description and a job specification; (iii) built a recruitment tracker and screened sample CVs; (iv) prepared an interview scoring sheet and a selection note; (v) designed an onboarding checklist and an appointment letter format; (vi) prepared an attendance and payroll sheet in MS Excel; (vii) planned a training session, an appraisal form and an engagement activity; (viii) summarised the HR policy points and labour law rules studied and created a sample employee file; and (ix) reviewed the work with the supervisor.

Skills and tools. Recruitment, Onboarding, Payroll Basics, MS Excel, Documentation and HR Communication.

Outputs. Job description, recruitment tracker, interview scoring sheet, onboarding checklist, offer and appointment letter formats, attendance and payroll sheet, training plan, appraisal form, HR policy summary, employee file format, monthly HR report, and this internship report.

11. Case Study Exercise: High Staff Turnover in a Small Company

A case study exercise was completed on a typical business problem. The business and figures are illustrative and not taken from any real organisation.

Background. A small trading company (fictitious) with 30 employees was run by its owner, who handled hiring and salary himself without any HR system.

Problem observed. In one year 12 employees left, an attrition rate of 12 / 30 = 40%. Candidates were hired after a short talk, with no written job description. New joiners received no induction and often did not know their duties. Salary was sometimes paid late because attendance was not recorded properly. There was no appraisal, so good workers received no feedback or recognition, and there was no policy on leave or grievances. Records were kept in loose papers. Exit reasons told to colleagues were 'no clarity', 'late salary' and 'no growth'. The owner felt that people no longer wanted to work.

Analysis. The main problem was not the labour market but the absence of basic HR processes. Unclear roles led to confusion and poor selection. No onboarding made new people feel lost. Late and unclear salary damaged trust. Without appraisal and growth, good employees had no reason to stay, and without records and policies, decisions looked unfair.

Recommendations. (1) Write a job description for every post and use it in hiring. (2) Use a simple structured interview with a scoring sheet. (3) Introduce an onboarding checklist and a buddy for the first month. (4) Record attendance daily and pay salary on a fixed date with a payslip. (5) Introduce a yearly appraisal with clear goals and a recognition scheme. (6) Prepare a short HR policy covering leave, conduct and grievances, and check the applicable labour law requirements. (7) Keep employee files and track attrition and exit reasons every month.

Expected result and lesson learned. With clear roles, a fair process, timely pay and regular feedback, attrition is expected to fall and productivity to rise. The lesson is that HRM is a system: hiring, onboarding, pay, development, feedback and records must work together, and measuring attrition and its causes helps to find and fix the weakest link.

12. Mock Practical Exercise: A Thirty-Day HR Cycle for a Small Organisation

In the mock practical exercise the student planned and prepared the HR work of a thirty-day cycle for a sample (dummy) organisation, from the first vacancy to the final report, using the tools and methods practised earlier. The steps followed were:

1. Planning: listed the vacancy, the budget and the HR tasks for the month.
2. Job description: wrote the job description and specification.
3. Recruitment: built a tracker, screened sample CVs and scored interviews.
4. Onboarding: prepared the offer letter, the document list and the first-month plan.
5. Attendance and payroll: recorded attendance and leave and calculated gross pay, deductions and net pay in MS Excel.
6. Training and appraisal: planned a short training session with a pre-test and post-test and prepared an appraisal form with KPIs.
7. Engagement and compliance: planned a recognition activity, listed policy points and checked records and consent.
8. Reporting: used sample data to calculate hiring, attendance, attrition and training measures and wrote a one-page HR report with lessons and next steps.

The exercise showed that every step depends on the one before it: an unclear job description leads to the wrong hire, poor onboarding wastes the hire, wrong attendance data leads to wrong salary, missing feedback hides problems, and honest records are the base of the next hiring cycle.

b. Skills Learned

Technical skills. Writing job descriptions and specifications; screening CVs; scoring interviews; preparing onboarding checklists and HR letters; maintaining attendance and leave records; calculating salary and deductions in MS Excel; planning and evaluating training; designing appraisal forms; analysing attrition and survey data; maintaining employee files and HR reports.

Professional skills. Communication and listening; empathy and fairness; confidentiality and integrity; attention to detail and accuracy; time management; ethical and legal awareness; teamwork and acceptance of feedback; and documentation, report writing and presentation.

These skills were developed through repeated practice and daily documentation. Interview and payroll exercises improved accuracy and fairness, writing letters and policies improved clarity, feedback practice improved empathy, and writing remarks and reports improved communication.

c. Observed Attitude and Gained Values

1. People first: organisations succeed when employees are treated with respect.
2. Fairness and equality: every candidate and employee deserves equal treatment.
3. Confidentiality and integrity: personal and salary information must be protected.
4. Accuracy and timeliness: correct records and on-time salary build trust.
5. Discipline and punctuality: regular reporting at fixed timings and daily attendance records.

d. Challenges Faced

Understanding terms such as CTC, loss of pay, KPI and eNPS was handled by using a glossary, worked examples in Excel and mentor guidance.

Learning labour law rules, which are changing, was handled by studying official sources, noting the date of each source and checking with the supervisor.

Writing neutral job descriptions and fair interview questions was difficult at first; this was handled by using templates, examples and supervisor review.

Working without real employee data was handled by using sample files, dummy figures and clear assumptions written beside each calculation.

Maintaining consistent documentation was handled by using daily log entries and reviewing feedback to improve documentation progressively.

Managing time between practice, documentation and report writing was handled by dividing work week by week and using review days for corrections.

e. Career Pathways

The knowledge gained supports careers such as HR Executive, Recruiter or Talent Acquisition Executive, HR Generalist, Payroll Executive, Training Coordinator, Employee Engagement Executive, HR Compliance Executive and HR Analyst. Opportunities exist in companies of all sizes, staffing and consulting firms, schools and colleges, hospitals, banks and start-ups, and in government and public sector organisations. Related study options include BBA, MBA or PGDM in Human Resource Management, postgraduate diplomas in HR, MA or MSW in human resource or personnel management, and certifications from professional bodies such as SHRM, HRCI and NIPM. Because laws and workplace practices change quickly, continuous learning and practical experience are essential.

CONCLUSION

The internship in Human Resource Management (HRM) was a valuable learning experience that integrated academic knowledge with practical activity. The programme achieved its objectives through structured learning, guided practice, assignments, supervisor review and documentation.

The student gained a clear understanding of how HR work is planned and carried out - through HR functions, recruitment and selection, job descriptions, onboarding, attendance and payroll, training, appraisal, engagement, policies and labour laws, and records - and acquired practical familiarity with job descriptions, scoring sheets, onboarding checklists, payroll sheets, appraisal forms and HR reports. The experience has strengthened the student's employability and provides a foundation for further study and work in HR and management.

Reflection

Looking back, the most useful lesson of the internship was that HRM is a chain, and a chain is only as strong as its weakest link. A clear job description brings the right candidates, a fair process selects the right person, onboarding settles the person, correct pay builds trust, training and feedback build skill and loyalty, and honest records protect everyone. The case study showed how high attrition can follow from missing even one link. Moving from concept to practice to documentation made abstract ideas concrete, and supervisor feedback showed where understanding was weak. The habit of recording each day's work also made it easier to see progress over the weeks.

Objectives and Achievement

The objective of understanding HR functions was achieved through concept sessions and a function map. The objective of learning recruitment, selection and job descriptions was achieved through a job description, a recruitment tracker and a scoring sheet. The objective of learning onboarding, attendance and payroll was achieved through a checklist, letter formats and an Excel payroll sheet. The objective of learning training, appraisal and engagement was achieved through a training plan, an appraisal form and an attrition and survey calculation. The objective of learning policies, labour laws and records was achieved through a policy summary and an employee file format. The objective of developing professional discipline was achieved through daily attendance, supervisor review and report writing.

Future Scope

The knowledge gained can support further study of human resource management, business and law, and careers in HR in companies, schools, hospitals, banks and start-ups. With the new Labour Codes, growing use of HR software and data, remote and flexible work and more attention to employee wellbeing, trained and ethical HR professionals are increasingly needed, including in Bihar.

Suggestions for Improvement of the Programme

1. Include live practice with HR software and talks by HR professionals and local employers, with appropriate permissions.
2. Continue regular mentor feedback and progress reviews.
3. Provide more project-based activities such as preparing HR documents for a small local organisation under supervision.
4. Encourage students to maintain detailed daily documentation.
