ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I express my sincere gratitude to RK NEXORA, RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED, _____ (College Name), my faculty mentors and the internship supervisor, _____, for their guidance and support. The structured activities, learning resources and regular feedback helped me complete this internship in Business Communication successfully.

I am thankful to the Head of the Department and the college mentor for their encouragement and for guiding me in preparing this report. I am also grateful to the management of RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED for providing a professional learning environment and the opportunity to learn and apply my knowledge in a practical setting. The concept sessions, hands-on tasks with sample data and case studies, and the supervisor's patient and detailed feedback helped me understand how to speak, write and listen effectively in a professional setting.

Finally, I thank my family and peers for their constant encouragement throughout the programme.

PREFACE

Internships are an important part of the undergraduate programme, as they allow students to see how classroom learning is applied in real organisations. The Four-Year Undergraduate Programme (FYUGP), introduced in line with the National Education Policy 2020, gives special importance to experiential learning, skill development and employability. This report has been prepared as part of the internship requirement of Magadh University and the Higher Education guidelines applicable in Bihar.

The report describes the internship undertaken in Business Communication at RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED, the plan followed, the work carried out, and the learning gained. A graduate may know a subject very well and still fail to get a job, to win a client or to be understood by a team because of poor communication. In every workplace people write emails and reports, speak in meetings, make presentations, negotiate, listen to customers and face interviews, and the quality of this communication affects results, relationships and careers. Business communication is the skill of sharing information clearly, correctly and courteously in a professional setting. For students of Bihar, where many are the first in their family to seek a professional career and where English and Hindi are both used in the workplace, strong communication skill is a major advantage. This report describes how the main skills of business communication were studied and how a communication portfolio of real working documents - emails, a report, a presentation plan, minutes of a meeting, a negotiation plan and a resume - was prepared using fictitious examples.

The report has been arranged in the order suggested by the University, beginning with the cover page and acknowledgement and ending with the conclusion and attendance sheet. It is hoped that it gives a clear and honest account of the internship experience. All examples in this report use dummy data and fictitious names; no real personal or business information has been handled.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This report documents the internship completed in Business Communication at RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED (RK NEXORA - 'Campus to Career'). The programme required a minimum of 120 hours, completed over about four to five weeks (28 working days) with daily sessions of four to five hours, and was supported by an attendance log, supervisor guidance and review.

Background. Communication is the process of sending and receiving messages so that the receiver understands what the sender meant. Business communication is communication within and between organisations to achieve business goals, and it may be written, spoken or non-verbal. It flows downward from managers to staff, upward from staff to managers, and horizontally between colleagues, and it also flows outward to customers, suppliers and the public. Clear communication saves time, avoids errors, builds trust and creates a good image of the organisation; poor communication causes delay, conflict and loss.

Objectives. The internship aimed to (i) understand the communication process, its types, barriers and the 7 Cs, (ii) write effective business emails, (iii) write structured reports, (iv) design and deliver presentations, (v) follow meeting etiquette and write agendas and minutes, (vi) learn the basics of negotiation, (vii) practise public speaking, (viii) develop active listening, (ix) follow professional etiquette, and (x) prepare for interviews with a resume and practice answers.

Work carried out. Each topic had a concept session followed by practical exercises: writing and correcting emails, drafting a short report, preparing slides, conducting mock meetings and writing agendas and minutes, role-playing a negotiation, giving short speeches, practising listening exercises and holding mock interviews. All the examples used fictitious names and organisations. The later part of the programme was devoted to the communication portfolio project, a case study exercise, a mock practical exercise, supervisor review and preparation of this report.

Project. The work was tied together in a project titled Professional Communication Portfolio. The portfolio brings together eleven working documents prepared during the internship - business emails, a short report, a presentation plan, an agenda and minutes of a meeting, a negotiation plan, a speech outline, a listening checklist, an etiquette checklist, a resume and answers to common interview questions - and a self-assessment of the communication skills before and after the internship.

Method. A blended method was followed - learn, practise, document and review - supported by a daily attendance log with day-wise remarks and regular feedback from the supervisor.

Learning gained. The student gained a clear understanding of the communication process and its barriers, practical skill in writing emails and reports, designing and delivering presentations, conducting meetings, negotiating, speaking in public, listening actively and preparing for interviews, and the confidence to express ideas in a clear and polite way.

Key observations. Communication is judged by what the receiver understands and not by what the sender says; clear structure and simple words are more effective than long and difficult language; listening is as important as speaking; and courtesy and preparation make a message stronger.

Conclusion. The internship met its objectives and contributed to the student's academic understanding, employability and confidence. The report follows the University's suggestive format: cover page, acknowledgement, certificate, contents, preface, executive summary, about the agency, plan and execution, learning outcome, conclusion and attendance sheet.

ABOUT THE AGENCY

RK NEXORA, a unit of RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED, provides structured internship and skill-development programmes under the theme 'Campus to Career'. The organization focuses on academic-industry alignment, practical exposure, assessment, documentation and employability-oriented learning.

Particulars	Details
Name of Agency	RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED
Programme / Unit	RK NEXORA - Campus to Career
Registered Office	C/O Mukesh Kumar, Khiri, PS Atri, Jethiyan, Atri, Gaya - 805236, Bihar, India

Internship Topic	Business Communication

1. Vision

To support students in developing practical, professional and industry-relevant capabilities.

2. Mission

To deliver structured learning experiences that connect academic knowledge with workplace expectations.

3. Activities of the Agency

1. Structured internship programmes aligned with university and higher-education requirements.
2. Skill-development learning modules, practical activities and assignments.
3. Attendance tracking, supervision, assessment and documentation.
4. Employability-oriented guidance connecting campus learning to career readiness.

4. Programme Structure

The internship programme is organised around a fixed number of learning hours, completed over a defined period. Each intern is registered on the internship portal with a unique registration number, is assigned a supervisor, follows a day-wise plan and maintains an attendance log. Learning is organised into three phases: Orientation (Days 1-2), Learning and Practice (Days 3-22, ten sub-topics of two days each: one concept day and one hands-on day) and Project and Review (Days 23-28), followed by a concluding review.

5. Role of the Supervisor

The internship supervisor assigned by the agency guided the student through the programme, explained concepts, assigned practice tasks, reviewed the daily log and gave feedback. The supervisor also verified attendance and reviewed the student's work at the end of the programme.

PLAN AND EXECUTION

1. Objectives

The internship was planned around the following objectives, each linked to a part of the programme:

1. Understand the communication process, its types, barriers and the 7 Cs of effective communication (Week 1).
2. Write professional emails with a clear subject, structure, tone and etiquette (Week 1).
3. Write structured reports with findings and recommendations (Week 2).
4. Design and deliver presentations, and handle questions (Week 2).
5. Follow meeting etiquette; write agendas and minutes (Week 3).
6. Learn negotiation basics, public speaking and active listening (Week 3).
7. Follow professional etiquette, prepare for interviews and complete a communication portfolio (Weeks 4-5).

2. Methodology

The programme followed a blended method made up of four connected steps, repeated for each topic:

Learn. Each topic began with a concept session in which the supervisor explained the idea, its main terms and how it is used in real organisations. Notes were prepared in the student's own words.

Practise. The concepts were then applied in guided hands-on tasks - rewriting poor emails, drafting a short report from data, building a slide deck, writing an agenda and minutes, role-playing a negotiation, giving two-minute speeches, practising paraphrasing and questioning in listening exercises, writing a resume and answering mock interview questions. Only sample data and fictitious examples were used, so that no real personal or business information was handled.

Document. Every day's work was recorded in the internship attendance log with a short remark, and sheets, files and screenshots were saved so that the work could be reviewed.

Review. The supervisor reviewed the work, pointed out errors and suggested improvements. Review days, a case study and a mock practical exercise helped to consolidate the learning.

3. Understanding Business Communication - Concepts Studied

3.1 The communication process

Communication is a two-way process. The sender has an idea and encodes it into words, symbols or gestures; the message is sent through a channel such as a talk, a letter, an email or a phone call; the receiver decodes the message and gives feedback, which shows whether the message was understood. At any stage, noise - anything that disturbs the message, such as a poor connection, an unclear word or a distraction - can change the meaning. Feedback closes the loop; without it the sender can never be sure that the message has been received as intended. The figure below shows the process.

Communication may be verbal (spoken or written), non-verbal (body language, gestures, eye contact, tone of voice, dress) or visual (charts, pictures, slides). In face-to-face talk, the non-verbal part carries a large share of the meaning, which is why the same words can sound friendly or rude.

3.2 Types and channels of business communication

By direction, business communication is downward (instructions, policies and feedback from managers), upward (reports, suggestions and complaints from staff), horizontal (between colleagues and departments) and diagonal (across levels and departments). By form it is formal, following the official channels and rules, or informal, such as the 'grapevine' of talk among staff. The channel should be chosen to suit the message: a simple request can be an email or a message, a complicated matter is better discussed in a meeting, a sensitive matter is best handled face to face or by phone, and a matter that must be recorded must be written. The table below gives a quick guide.

Situation	Best channel	Reason
Daily update to the team	Group message or short email	Quick and easy to read
Formal request to another department	Email with a clear subject line	Creates a record and is polite
Explaining a complicated plan	Meeting with slides	Allows questions and discussion
Giving critical feedback	Face to face or phone	Allows tone and a two-way talk
Official decision or policy	Formal letter or circular	Needs a permanent, signed record
Reporting findings of a study	Written report	Allows detail, charts and recommendations

3.3 Barriers to communication and the 7 Cs

Barriers prevent a message from reaching the receiver as intended. Physical barriers are noise, distance and a poor network; language barriers include difficult words, jargon and differences between languages and dialects; psychological barriers are fear, anger, prejudice and lack of interest; organisational barriers include too many levels and unclear reporting lines; and cultural barriers arise from differences in customs and gestures. To overcome them, the sender should use simple language, check the understanding of the receiver, choose the right time and place and be patient.

The 7 Cs are a checklist for effective messages. A message should be clear (one main idea, simple words), concise (no unnecessary words), concrete (facts, figures and examples), correct (accurate information and grammar), coherent (a logical order), complete (all the information the receiver needs) and courteous (polite, respectful and considerate). The student used this checklist to edit every email and report in the portfolio.

C	Poor example	Improved example
Clear and concise	Kindly note that with reference to the above, the said meeting is hereby postponed to a later date.	The meeting is moved from Monday to Wednesday, 3 pm.
Concrete and complete	Send me the report soon.	Please send the sales report for September by Friday, 5 pm.
Courteous	Reply immediately. You never answer on time.	Could you please reply by tomorrow noon? Thank you for your help.

3.4 Business email writing

Email is the most common form of business writing. A good business email has a clear subject line that tells the reader what it is about, a polite greeting, a short opening that states the purpose, a body with the details in short paragraphs or bullets, a closing that states the action needed and the date, and a polite sign-off with the name and contact details. The tone should be professional - neither too casual nor too stiff. Rules of email etiquette include: check the recipients before sending, use 'Reply all' only when everyone needs the reply, do not write in capital letters, attach files with a mention in the text, reply within a day, and read the email again before sending it. Emails are records and can be forwarded, so nothing should be written that one would not want others to read.

> Sample email written in the portfolio (fictitious)
> To: Mr. Rakesh Kumar, Sales Manager
> Subject: Request for approval of the September training budget
> Dear Mr. Kumar,
> I am writing to request your approval of the training budget of Rs. 18,000 for the September workshop on customer handling for the sales team (12 participants).
> The budget covers the trainer's fee (Rs. 10,000), materials (Rs. 3,000) and refreshments (Rs. 5,000). A detailed estimate is attached.
> Could you please approve it by Friday, 12 September, so that the trainer can be confirmed? I shall be happy to explain any item.
> Thank you for your time.
> Yours sincerely,
> Anita Kumari
> Training Assistant | Mobile: 98xxxxxx00

The email follows the 7 Cs: it is clear and concise in its subject line, concrete in its figures, complete with the breakdown and the date, and courteous in its closing. The student also rewrote five poorly written emails, for example by replacing a subject line such as 'Request' with 'Request for approval of the September training budget'.

3.5 Report writing

A report is an organised document that presents information, findings and recommendations to help a reader take a decision. Reports may be informal (short, such as a visit report) or formal (long, with a fixed structure), routine (such as a weekly sales report) or special (such as a study of a problem). A formal report usually has a title page, a summary, contents, an introduction (purpose and scope), the method, the findings, the conclusion, the recommendations and appendices. The language should be impersonal, factual and organised in numbered headings, and tables and charts should be used for figures. The student wrote a two-page report on 'Reasons for the fall in footfall at a fictitious bookshop' with the structure shown below.

Section	Content of the sample report
Title and date	Report on the fall in footfall at Gyan Book Centre, October 2026
Summary	Footfall fell by 18% in three months; the main reasons are online competition, lack of parking and no promotion; three actions are recommended.

Section	Content of the sample report
Introduction	Purpose: to find the reasons for the fall. Scope: the main shop; period: July to September.
Method	Counting of customers on 12 days, a short survey of 40 customers and discussion with the staff.
Findings	Daily footfall fell from 120 to 98; 55% of surveyed customers said they also buy online; 30% mentioned parking; 25% had not heard of the new offers.
Conclusion	The shop must give customers a reason to come: service, offers and convenience.
Recommendations	Start a loyalty card; announce offers by message; arrange parking with the neighbouring shop; review in three months.

3.6 Presentation skills

A presentation is a spoken message supported by visuals. Its success depends on three things: the content, the design of the slides and the delivery. The content should have a clear opening that states the purpose and the plan, a body with two to four main points supported by facts and examples, and a closing that summarises and states the action. The slides should be simple - one idea per slide, a short heading, no more than five or six short lines, large readable letters, a limited choice of colours, and charts instead of tables of numbers. The slides are an aid; the speaker should not read them aloud. In delivery, the speaker should stand straight, look at the audience, speak slowly and clearly, use gestures naturally and keep to the time. Questions should be answered honestly and briefly; if the answer is not known, it is better to say so and promise to find out.

3.7 Meeting etiquette, agenda and minutes

A meeting brings people together to share information, solve problems and take decisions. A good meeting has a clear purpose, a written agenda sent in advance, a start and an end on time, a chairperson who keeps to the agenda, and a person who records the minutes. Participants should come prepared, listen without interrupting, speak briefly and politely, keep phones silent and follow up on their action points. The minutes are the official record of what was discussed and decided and should state the date, time and place, the people present and absent, the points discussed, the decisions taken, the person responsible for each action and the date of completion.

Sample minutes written in the portfolio (fictitious)

Minutes of the weekly team meeting - Monday, 6 October 2026, 11:00 am, Conference room

Present: Mr. R. Kumar (chair), Ms. A. Kumari (secretary), Mr. S. Singh, Ms. P. Devi. Absent: Mr. M. Ali (on leave).

1. Review of the last meeting: The minutes of 29 September were read and approved.

2. September sales report: Sales were Rs. 4.2 lakh, 6% above target. It was noted that the north zone fell short by 8%.

3. Customer handling workshop: The budget of Rs. 18,000 was approved. The workshop will be held on 20 October.

Action points:

- Mr. S. Singh to prepare a plan for the north zone - by 13 October.
- Ms. A. Kumari to confirm the trainer and the venue - by 10 October.

The meeting ended at 11:50 am. Next meeting: Monday, 13 October, 11:00 am.

3.8 Negotiation basics

Negotiation is a discussion between two or more parties to reach an agreement when their interests are partly the same and partly different. Good negotiators prepare: they know their own aims, the lowest result they would accept (the walk-away point), the likely aims of the other party and the alternatives if there is no agreement. The negotiation passes through the stages of preparation, opening, discussion and bargaining, agreement and follow-up. Two styles were studied: the competitive style, in which each side tries to gain at the cost of the other, and the collaborative style, in which both sides look for a solution that serves the interests of both (a win-win outcome). Persuasion uses facts, reasons and the benefit to the other side, and not pressure.

In the practice exercise, a buyer would pay up to Rs. 60,000 for a second-hand photocopier, while the seller would accept not less than Rs. 50,000. The two ranges overlap between Rs. 50,000 and Rs. 60,000, so an agreement is possible. By offering a quick payment and asking for a six-month service, the buyer reached a price of Rs. 54,000 with a free service for the first six months, which both sides found fair.

3.9 Public speaking and active listening

Public speaking is speaking to a group in a planned way. Good speakers know their purpose and audience, organise the speech into an opening that gains attention, a body of a few clear points with examples and a closing that people remember, practise aloud, control nervousness by deep breathing and preparation, and use the voice well - clear pronunciation, a suitable speed, pauses and changes in tone. The student gave five two-minute speeches, with the supervisor's feedback on voice, eye contact, posture and structure.

Listening is the part of communication that is most neglected. Hearing is physical, but listening is the active effort to understand. The behaviours of an active listener are: give full attention and put away the phone; look at the speaker and nod; do not interrupt; ask questions to clarify; paraphrase what was heard ('So you mean that the delivery will be on Friday?'); notice feelings and non-verbal signs; and respond with respect even when disagreeing. The student practised in pairs, where one spoke for two minutes and the other summarised without notes, and was surprised to find how much was missed in the first attempts.

Level of listening	Description	Example
Ignoring	Not paying attention	Looking at the phone while a customer is speaking
Pretend listening	Appearing to listen	Nodding but thinking about something else
Selective listening	Hearing only part	Hearing the price but missing the delivery date
Attentive listening	Following the words	Noting the details of the order
Empathic listening	Understanding words and feelings	Understanding that the customer is worried about the delay

3.10 Professional etiquette

Etiquette is the set of manners that shows respect for others at the workplace. It includes punctuality, appropriate dress, greeting people politely, using names and titles correctly, a firm and friendly handshake or a folded-hand greeting, keeping the workplace clean, respecting the time and privacy of others, answering the phone courteously, using the phone silently in meetings, being careful with language and jokes, thanking people and apologising when wrong. On the phone, the speaker should introduce herself, speak clearly, take notes and repeat the important points. In email and messaging, a polite tone, correct spelling and a suitable length are signs of professionalism. Etiquette also covers social media: personal posts can affect the reputation of an employee and of an organisation, and confidential information must never be shared.

3.11 Interview skills and resume writing

An interview is a conversation in which the employer judges whether a candidate is suitable. Preparation includes learning about the organisation and the job, preparing answers to common questions - 'Tell me about yourself', 'What are your strengths and weaknesses?', 'Why do you want this job?' and 'Where do you see yourself in five years?' - preparing questions to ask and arriving early with the documents. During the interview, the candidate should greet politely, sit straight, listen to the whole question, answer honestly and briefly with examples, and thank the interviewers at the end. The STAR method (Situation, Task, Action, Result) helps to give structured answers about past experience. A resume is a one-page or two-page summary of the candidate's education, skills, projects and achievements, written in clear headings with the most relevant information first, with no mistakes and a professional email address.

> Sample answer using the STAR method (fictitious)
> Question: Tell me about a time when you solved a problem in a team.
> Situation: In the college project, our group had only two days left and one member fell ill.
> Task: I had to make sure that the presentation was completed.
> Action: I divided his slides among three of us, made a checklist, and rehearsed with the team the night before.
> Result: We presented on time and received the second-highest marks in the class.

4. Week-wise Plan and Execution

Week	Days	Activities
Week 1	Days 1-6	Orientation and foundations: company induction, communication fundamentals, business email writing and report writing, each with a study session and a practice task.
Week 2	Days 7-12	Presenting and meeting: presentation skills, meeting etiquette with agenda and minutes, and negotiation basics.
Week 3	Days 13-18	Speaking and listening: public speaking, active listening and professional etiquette.
Week 4	Days 19-24	Career readiness: interview skills, the Professional Communication Portfolio, a case study exercise and a mock practical exercise.
Week 5	Days 25-28	Project closure: supervisor review and feedback, internship report drafting, presentation preparation and final review.

5. Week-wise Narrative

Week 1: The first week was devoted to orientation and foundations. After company induction, the student studied the communication process, its barriers and the 7 Cs, practised writing and correcting business emails and began a short report with findings and recommendations.

Week 2: In the second week the student prepared and delivered a short presentation, learnt how to plan a meeting, write an agenda and minutes, and role-played a negotiation using a prepared plan.

Week 3: The third week was devoted to public speaking, with five short speeches, to active listening exercises in pairs and to professional etiquette, including telephone and social media manners.

Week 4: In the fourth week the student studied interview skills, wrote a resume, practised answers with the STAR method in mock interviews, and completed the portfolio, a case study exercise and a mock practical exercise.

Week 5: The last week was devoted to project closure: supervisor review and feedback, drafting of the internship report, preparation of a presentation and final review before submission.

6. Topic-wise Learning in Detail

6.1 Communication Fundamentals

Concept: The communication process, types, barriers and the 7 Cs. Practice carried out: Drawing the communication process and rewriting six poor messages using the 7 Cs (section 3.3).

6.2 Business Email Writing

Concept: Email structure, subject lines, tone and etiquette. Practice carried out: Writing ten emails - a request, a reminder, a complaint, an apology, a thank-you, a follow-up and others - and correcting five poor ones.

6.3 Report Writing

Concept: Report types, structure, findings and recommendations. Practice carried out: Writing a two-page report with a summary, findings, conclusion and recommendations (section 3.5).

6.4 Presentation Skills

Concept: Slide design, structure, delivery and handling questions. Practice carried out: Preparing a ten-slide presentation and delivering it for ten minutes with questions from the supervisor.

6.5 Meeting Etiquette

Concept: Agenda, minutes, participation and professional conduct. Practice carried out: Writing an agenda and minutes for a mock team meeting and chairing a ten-minute discussion.

6.6 Negotiation Basics

Concept: Preparation, bargaining, persuasion and win-win outcomes. Practice carried out: Preparing a negotiation plan with targets and walk-away points and role-playing a purchase negotiation.

6.7 Public Speaking

Concept: Speech structure, voice, body language and confidence. Practice carried out: Giving five two-minute speeches and recording the feedback on voice, posture and structure.

6.8 Active Listening

Concept: Listening techniques, feedback and avoiding distractions. Practice carried out: Doing paired paraphrasing exercises and preparing a listening checklist.

6.9 Professional Etiquette

Concept: Workplace behaviour, dress code, punctuality and courtesy. Practice carried out: Preparing a checklist of office etiquette and role-playing telephone conversations.

6.10 Interview Skills

Concept: Common questions, preparation, resume and body language. Practice carried out: Writing a one-page resume and answering twelve common questions in two mock interviews.

7. Good Practice and Ethics in Communication - Points Studied

Communication carries responsibility, because words affect people and decisions. The points studied are summarised below.

- Honesty: state facts correctly; do not exaggerate, hide important information or mislead.
- Respect: use polite words and tone, avoid insulting or discriminatory language and respect different views.
- Confidentiality: do not share customer, salary or business secrets with those who are not authorised.

- Clarity and responsibility: write so that the message cannot be misunderstood; read again before sending.
- Fairness in negotiation: bargain firmly but do not lie, threaten or take unfair advantage.
- Acknowledging sources: give credit for facts, charts and ideas taken from others; do not copy.
- Responsible use of digital media: think before posting or forwarding; the Information Technology Act, 2000 and the Digital Personal Data Protection Act, 2023 apply to online communication and personal data.

8. Process Flows Studied

8.1 Steps in writing a business message

- Decide the purpose: what should the reader know, feel or do?
- Know the reader: what does the reader already know, and what does the reader need?
- Collect the facts and arrange them in a logical order.
- Write the first draft in simple words, with the main point first.
- Edit using the 7 Cs, check spelling and figures, and then send or deliver.

8.2 Steps in a negotiation

- Prepare: aims, walk-away point, facts and the other party's likely interests.
- Open: greet, state the purpose and build a friendly atmosphere.
- Discuss: ask questions, listen and find the interests behind the positions.
- Bargain: trade what is cheap for you and valuable for them for what is valuable for you.
- Agree: summarise the agreement in writing and plan the follow-up.

9. Worked Examples with Sample (Dummy) Data

Worked example 1 - editing an email. A poor email written by a fictitious employee was edited using the 7 Cs, and the two versions are shown below.

> Poor version
> Before: Subject: Urgent!!!
> Sir, you had told me to send the thing so I am sending it, please see and tell me, we are waiting from morning only and nobody is replying, this is very bad.

> Improved version
> After: Subject: Quotation for 50 office chairs - reply requested by Thursday
> Dear Mr. Singh,
> Please find attached the quotation for 50 office chairs that you requested on Monday. The price is Rs. 3,200 per chair, with delivery in 10 days.
> Could you please confirm the order by Thursday, 5 pm, so that the stock can be reserved? Thank you.
> Regards, Ravi Kumar, Sales Executive

The improved email has a clear subject that states the matter and the deadline, a polite greeting, the facts (what, how much, when) and a request with a date. It is shorter, more courteous and more useful than the first. The student noted that the main cause of poor emails is unclear thinking, so the writer should decide what she wants the reader to do before writing the first line.

Worked example 2 - a presentation outline. For a ten-minute presentation on 'Importance of customer feedback' to a fictitious store team, the outline was: (1) Opening - a one-minute story about a customer who left because no one listened; (2) Point 1 - what feedback tells us, with the result of a small survey; (3) Point 2 - how to collect feedback, with three methods; (4) Point 3 - how to act on feedback, with a before-and-after example; (5) Closing - a summary slide and a call to action. The time was planned as shown in Figure 2, and the presentation was practised twice aloud with a timer.

Slide	Heading	Content
1	Title	Topic, speaker and date
2	Why feedback matters	One striking fact and a short story
3	What our customers say	A bar chart of survey results
4	How to collect feedback	Three methods in three short lines
5	Acting on feedback	Before-and-after example with a photograph
6	Summary and action	Three key points and the next step

Worked example 3 - self-assessment. The student rated her communication skills out of 10 before and after the internship, based on the feedback of the supervisor and the mock sessions. Email writing improved from 5 to 8, report writing from 4 to 7, presentation from 4 to 7, listening from 5 to 8, public speaking from 3 to 7 and interview skills from 4 to 8. The average score rose from 4.2 to 7.5. The assessment helped the student to see that the largest gain was in the skills that were practised most, and that public speaking and report writing still need regular practice.

10. Project: Professional Communication Portfolio

Problem statement. Many students and young employees have good knowledge but find it difficult to express it in a clear professional form. The aim of the project was to build a Professional Communication Portfolio - a set of working documents that show the student's communication skills and can be used as models, and a record of the student's improvement during the internship.

10.1 Contents of the portfolio

No.	Document	Skill shown	Main learning
1	Ten business emails (including a corrected set)	Email writing	Subject line, 7 Cs and tone
2	Two-page report on footfall	Report writing	Findings and recommendations
3	Ten-slide presentation and time plan	Presentation	One idea per slide; timing
4	Agenda and minutes of a mock meeting	Meetings	Recording decisions and actions
5	Negotiation plan and role-play notes	Negotiation	Walk-away point and win-win thinking
6	Five speech outlines with feedback	Public speaking	Structure and voice
7	Listening checklist and exercise notes	Listening	Paraphrasing and questions
8	Etiquette checklist	Etiquette	Phone, dress, behaviour
9	One-page resume	Resume	Clear headings, achievements
10	Answers to twelve interview questions (STAR)	Interview	Structured, honest answers

10.2 Self-assessment

The scores in worked example 3 were entered in a table and a short reflection was written for each skill, stating one strength and one area for improvement. The feedback received from the supervisor was recorded, and an action plan was prepared for the next three months. For example, the plan for public speaking was to give one two-minute talk each week in front of a mirror or a friend, record it and listen for filler words such as 'actually' and 'you know'.

10.3 Findings and recommendations

- Planning before writing or speaking improved quality more than any other single habit.
- Short sentences and the use of the main point first made the emails and reports easier to read.
- Active listening reduced misunderstandings in the role-plays; paraphrasing was the most useful technique.
- Presentation scores improved most after rehearsing aloud with a timer.
- The student recommends a weekly communication practice session of one hour for all interns, with feedback from a mentor.

11. Case Study Exercise: A Misunderstanding Between Two Departments

In a fictitious printing and packaging company in Hajipur, the sales department promised a customer that a packaging order of 5,000 boxes would be delivered in seven days. The message to the production department was sent by phone and said only 'the Singh order is urgent'. Production understood that it must be done first and made the boxes in the wrong size, because the written specification was not sent. The order was late by five days, the customer complained and the two departments blamed each other. The case was given to the student for analysis.

Analysis. There were several communication failures: the message was verbal and was not recorded, it was incomplete (no size, quantity or date), it was not confirmed by feedback, and there was no single person responsible for the order. The barrier was not language but the lack of a clear process and of the habit of confirming. The emotional response of blame made the problem worse.

Proposed solution. Use a standard order form with all details, sent by email with a clear subject line; ask the receiver to confirm in writing; hold a five-minute daily meeting of sales and production with notes; assign an order owner; and use a polite, problem-solving tone when there is a failure. The student also wrote the apology email to the customer, which accepted the delay, explained the steps taken and gave a new, safe delivery date.

Expected benefit and cautions. Fewer misunderstandings, better delivery and better relations between the departments. The cautions noted were that new forms must be simple so that they are used, and that managers must show by their own example that confirming and recording are valued.

12. Mock Practical Exercise: Preparing and Presenting a Communication Task in Fixed Time

A mock practical exercise was conducted at the end of the learning phase to check that the student could carry out a complete communication task independently within a fixed time. The task was to prepare a response to a fictitious customer complaint about a delayed delivery, in writing and in speech. The steps followed were:

1. Understanding the complaint: the customer's message was read twice and the main facts and the feelings were noted.
2. Planning: the purpose (to apologise, explain and solve) and the facts to be included were listed.
3. Written reply: a courteous email with an apology, a short explanation, the solution and a new date was written and checked with the 7 Cs.
4. Phone call: a short script with an opening, listening, empathy and a closing was prepared.
5. Role-play: the call was practised with the supervisor playing the customer, and active listening was used.
6. Meeting note: a short note for the team on the cause and the improvement was written.
7. Review: the supervisor gave feedback on tone, structure and clarity, and the reply was revised.
8. Presentation: the case, the reply and the lessons were explained in about five minutes.

13. Sample Checklists Prepared

Email and report checklist

- Subject line states the matter; greeting and sign-off are polite.
- Main point and action required are in the first paragraph; the date is stated.
- Facts and figures are correct; spelling and grammar checked.
- The message follows the 7 Cs; attachments are included and mentioned.

Presentation and meeting checklist

- Purpose, audience and time are clear; agenda sent in advance.
- One idea per slide; large letters; charts instead of long tables; rehearsed with a timer.
- Meeting starts and ends on time; minutes record decisions, persons and dates.
- Questions are answered honestly; follow-up actions are tracked.

14. Tools and Resources

The following tools and resources were used during the internship: MS Word for letters, emails and reports, MS PowerPoint for presentations, MS Excel for charts, an email program for practice with templates, a timer and a voice recorder for speech practice, sample letters, reports, minutes and resumes provided by the agency, learning material and case studies, and regular mentor feedback.

15. Programme at a Glance

The programme was in the domain of Business Communication with RKNEXORA PRIVATE LIMITED as the agency. It required a minimum of 120 hours over 28 learning days, organised in three phases: Orientation (Days 1-2), Learning and Practice (Days 3-22) and Project and Review (Days 23-28). Attendance was recorded in the Internship Attendance Log, signed by the supervisor (see Attendance Sheet).

The approximate distribution of the effort across the topics is shown below.

LEARNING OUTCOME

a. Knowledge Acquired

1. The communication process, its types and channels in business.
2. Barriers to communication and the 7 Cs of effective communication.
3. The structure and etiquette of a business email.
4. The structure and language of a business report, with findings and recommendations.
5. Planning, designing and delivering a presentation, and answering questions.
6. Meeting procedure, agenda and minutes.
7. The stages and styles of negotiation, and the zone of agreement.
8. Public speaking, voice and body language; active listening and its levels.
9. Professional etiquette, telephone and social media manners.
10. Interview preparation, the STAR method and resume writing.

Glossary of Terms Learned

- Communication - Sharing a message so that it is understood.
- Encoding / Decoding - Putting a message into words or symbols / understanding it.
- Channel - The medium used, such as speech or email.
- Feedback - The receiver's response that shows understanding.

- Etiquette - Accepted rules of polite behaviour.
- STAR method - Situation, Task, Action, Result.
- Resume - A summary of a person's education, skills and experience.

b. Skills Learned

Technical skills. Writing clear and courteous business emails and letters; preparing structured reports; designing slides and delivering presentations; writing agendas and minutes; preparing a negotiation plan; outlining and delivering speeches; applying listening techniques; writing a resume; and using MS Word, MS PowerPoint and email effectively.

Professional skills. Clear thinking and expression; confidence; courtesy and empathy; teamwork; persuasion and negotiation; time management; adaptability to different audiences; receptiveness to feedback; and professional behaviour.

These skills were developed through repeated practice and daily documentation. Repeated practice with feedback was the key: each email, speech and mock interview was reviewed by the supervisor, corrected and tried again, and the self-assessment showed the progress from the start to the end of the programme.

c. Observed Attitude and Gained Values

1. Respect and courtesy: every person deserves a polite and attentive hearing.
2. Honesty: a message must be truthful, and a promise must be kept.
3. Responsibility: confirming, recording and following up is part of the job.
4. Humility to learn: feedback is a gift, and the habit of accepting it improves every skill.
5. Discipline and punctuality: regular reporting at fixed timings and daily attendance records.

d. Challenges Faced

Nervousness during the first speeches and mock interviews was handled by preparing an outline, practising aloud, breathing slowly and starting with small audiences.

Writing short and clear sentences, without too many difficult words, was handled by using the 7 Cs and reading the messages aloud.

Structuring a report logically was handled by writing the headings first and filling the facts under each.

Listening without interrupting was difficult at first; it was handled by the paired paraphrasing exercises.

Preparing answers for interviews without sounding memorised was handled by using the STAR structure and practising with different questions.

Managing time between practice, documentation and report writing was handled by dividing work week by week and using review days for corrections.

e. Career Pathways

The knowledge gained supports careers in almost every field. Roles in which communication is central include Customer Service Executive, Business Development and Sales Executive, HR and Recruitment Assistant, Front Office and Receptionist, Executive Assistant, Content and Communication Executive, Corporate Trainer (junior), Public Relations Assistant and Team Leader. Opportunities exist in companies of all sizes, banks, BPOs, hospitals, hotels, schools and government departments. Related higher-study options include MBA or PGDM, mass communication and journalism, and certificate courses in spoken English, business English, public speaking and soft skills. A good next step is to keep reading and writing daily, join a speaking club, take an English proficiency course, and build an online professional profile.

CONCLUSION

The internship in Business Communication was a valuable learning experience that integrated academic knowledge with practical activity. The programme achieved its objectives through structured learning, guided practice, assignments, supervisor review and documentation.

The student gained a clear understanding of how to speak, write and listen effectively in a professional setting - through the communication process, the 7 Cs, business emails, reports, presentations, meetings, negotiation, public speaking, listening, etiquette and interview skills - and prepared a Professional Communication Portfolio that records the learning. The experience has strengthened the student's employability and confidence and provides a foundation for every future study and job.

Reflection

Looking back, the most useful lesson of the internship was that communication is a skill that can be learnt through practice and feedback, and not a talent that some people have and others do not. A clear subject line, a main point at the start, a polite tone and a request with a date made even a simple email effective. Listening carefully and repeating what was heard avoided misunderstandings that a long explanation could not. The first nervous speech and the tenth were very different, which showed that confidence grows with preparation and practice.

Objectives and Achievement

The objective of understanding the communication process and the 7 Cs was achieved through the process figure and the edited messages. The objective of writing emails and reports was achieved through the ten emails and the footfall report. The objective of presentation and meetings was achieved through the ten-slide presentation and the minutes. The objective of negotiation, speaking and listening was achieved through the negotiation range, the five speeches and the paired listening exercises. The objective of etiquette and interviews was achieved through the checklist, the resume and the STAR answers, and the portfolio brought all of them together.

Future Scope

The knowledge gained can support further study in management, mass communication and languages and success in every job. With the growth of digital communication, remote work, customer-facing services and a competitive job market in Bihar and across India, people who can write, speak, listen and present clearly are always in demand.

Suggestions for Improvement of the Programme

1. Include a weekly speaking club or practice session with peer and mentor feedback.
2. Provide video recording of presentations so that students can see their own delivery.
3. Add practice in digital communication, such as professional use of messaging apps and video meetings.
4. Continue regular mentor feedback and progress reviews.
5. Encourage students to maintain detailed daily documentation.
